S1, E1 Show Notes

EPISODE 1 SUMMARY: In this episode of Before Birth & Beyond, celebrate Black Maternal Health Week with NICHQ. We host a roundtable discussion among Black maternal health experts, Dr. Keba Henderson, Dr. Stacy Scott, and Stacey Penny. Learn about Land

Acknowledgements, hear details from a new NICHQ publication, and hear why our staff work in MCH.

Getting Started with Land Acknowledgements: Moving from performative language to meaningful action

SEGMENT SUMMARY: Land acknowledgements can be an important tool for both Natives and non-Natives to facilitate honoring the past and acknowledging its impact on the present – and future. Understand the nuances between offering help vs. shared liberation. Within the organization, create space to have ongoing and meaningful conversations about how teams can integrate land acknowledgements and what additional ideas can be offered to indigenous communities. In addition to knowing about the impact of colonialism on a national level, you should become acquainted in authentic ways with local tribes where you live and work – whether they still reside there or if they consider where you live part of their ancestral homeland.

Carlos Peinado revisits the upper Missouri River basin in North Dakota in order to come to grips with the death of his grandmother. There he investigates how the massive post-war Garrison Dam project laid waste to an idyllic, self-sufficient Native American community, flooding 156,000 acres of their land.
